United States. They add, however, of serious alarm, but rather for the employment of a well-conceived and systematic plan for its extermination.

Starts in Small Patches. During the first season of infestation, in clover or alfalfa, dodder usually occurs in small scattered areas. As is the case in combating all weeds, it is essential that dodder should not be permitted to mature seed, and such small infested areas should be mowed and the dodder removed or burned in the field to prevent the development of seed. If seed has formed, burning the patches of dodder is the only remedy, since it kills not only the plants but also any seeds which may be lying on the surface of the soil. If infestation is so great that patch treatment cannot be depended upon, it will be necessary, in order to free the farm of the pest, either to plow the crop under or utilize it for hay before seed has formed. In the latter case, the aftermath left on the field should be closely grazed, for which purpose sheep are especially useful If the infestation is general and threatens seriously to damage succeeding crops, t may be necessary, according to the bulletin, to cut the crop, allow it to Select the Best Ears This Fall for dry, and burn it in the field in order that all dodder seed may be destroyed.
